PREFACE

AN alphabetical arrangement by the names of artists, or by schools where the artists are unknown, is followed in this book. In the attempt to solve the problem of numbering a rapidly growing collection of paintings, the experiment has been made here of adapting the C. A. Cutter system, long in use in libraries. To use the catalogue it is not necessary to be familiar with the system of numbering, but for those who may be interested an explanation follows. It consists of a combination of letters and numbers, composed of the initial letter of the author's name followed by numbers that represent the succeeding letters of the same, so that additional entries can be inserted without disturbing the sequence of the letters of the numerals. By this system the number, instead of being an arbitrary tag affixed to the picture, has a logical connection with it and its place in the catalogue, and the usual finding list is done away with. The plan has the advantage of being thoroughly logical and flexible, and the compilers of this catalogue believe that it will be considered an improvement over the prevailing methods, at least for the purpose of this collection.

The C. A. Cutter Two-Figure Author Table, which has been used in numbering this collection, calls for one letter for names beginning with a consonant (except S) and two for names beginning with vowels or S. Thus, Ab1 is Abbey and R28 is Rembrandt. When it is necessary to make a close classification an additional number is used. Thus, M61 is Millais, J. E.; M611 Miller, C. H.; M612 Miller, R. E.; M613 Millet, F. D.; M614 Millet, J. F. The number after the dash indicates the order of acquisition of works by an artist. Thus, R28-1 is the first painting by Rembrandt acquired by the Museum; R28-2 is the second; and so on. Works lent begin with 51 after the dash. Thus, following the fourteen paintings by Stuart owned by the Museum come the Stuarts lent, which begin with St9-51. To indicate that some doubt exists as to the attribution of a picture, the letter A is placed after the artist's figure; for instance, a picture attributed to Mabuse is M1A-1. To indicate that a picture is a copy after a work of the artist, the letter C is placed after the artist's figure; thus, a copy after Pater is P27C-1. To indicate that a picture is the work of an unknown artist of a certain school, a capital S is added. Thus, R28S is School of Rembrandt; Am3S is American School; the Italian School has been further subdivided to indicate particular sections of Italy; thus It5S is Italian School and It5S-F2 is Florentine, second picture acquired.

The gallery number, given immediately below the number of the picture, shows its location at the time of the publication of the catalogue. When no gallery number is given, it indicates that the painting is not on exhibition.

The information about each picture is arranged in four paragraphs:

1. Biographical note of the artist.
2. Title; biographical note if a portrait, or historical note if an event is depicted; description. The words right and left, when not otherwise stated, refer to the right and left of the spectator. Doubtful attributions and changes in attributions are noted; in the case of works lent to the Museum, the owner's attribution has generally been retained.
3. The provenance of the painting, the most recent being stated first.
4. Height and width of the picture, without frame, given in inches; material on which it is painted; when not painted in oil, then the medium, such as water color or pastel; the signature in capitals, small capitals, or small letters as the artist has written it; reference to the monthly BULLETIN of The Metropolitan Museum of Art if the picture has been described or illustrated therein; the fund through which it was purchased or the name of the donor if it is a gift or a bequest; the year of acquisition.

INTRODUCTION

THE beginning of the Museum's collection of pictures dates from 1871 when 174 paintings of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries became its property. These were bought the year previous in Europe by William T. Blodgett, a Trustee of the Museum, who held them until the Museum was able to make the purchase. One hundred of the number belonged to the Comte Cornet de Ways Ruart de Vanêch and were acquired in Brussels through Étienne Le Roy, the official expert of the Royal Museum of Belgium; fifteen others were acquired through M. Le Roy; and the remaining fifty-nine were purchased in Paris. Many excellent pictures were included in these collections: The Old Fiddler by van Ostade, Dutch Kermesse by Jan Steen, Drawing the Eel by S. Ruysdael, Hille Babbe by Frans Hals, three works by Tiepolo, and two by Guardi, to name only a few. A building at 681 Fifth Avenue was prepared for the exhibition of this collection, and, as stated in the first catalogue, published in 1872, the results led the Trustees to believe that their institution was permanently established upon a sure basis and would "become a most important agent in developing a taste and knowledge of art in this community."

The second great accretion of pictures, and the most important event in the history of the Department of Paintings, occurred in 1888 when Henry G. Marquand gave fifty-three pictures which placed the collection immediately in a position of considerable prominence. The Van Dycks, the three by Hals, the Rembrandts, the Vermeer, the strange and beautiful work ascribed to Lucas van Leyden, the double portrait of the early Florentine school, the variant of Van Eyck's Madonna of the Fountain, Saltash by Turner, these and the others of the donation fix the Marquand gift among the most notable benefactions ever made to public collections. The effect of the gift on the growth of the Museum and on the development of culture in America has been incalculable. In commemoration of Mr. Marquand's services and munificence, Gallery 11 at the head of the great staircase was set apart in 1911 for the exhibition of distinguished paintings of any school, and was called by his name. Several of the pictures included in his gift are shown in the Marquand Gallery, but the quality of the works he gave, whether exhibited here or distributed in the other rooms, is the real reminder of his connoisseurship and generosity.

Other gifts were received. Cornelius Vanderbilt gave the fresco of Saint Christopher by Pollaiuolo in 1880; Junius S. Morgan, the large portraits of the Hon. Henry Fane and his Guardians by Reynolds in 1887; and in the same year the Catharine Lorillard Wolfe Bequest, consisting of a collection of 148 modern paintings and a fund for its maintenance and increase, became the property of the Museum. Her collection included pictures of worth and out of the Wolfe Fund have been bought many of the best modern pictures now shown—Turner's Whale Ship, Delacroix's L'Enlèvement de Rébecca, Corot's Sleep of Diana, Renoir's Charpentier Family, and Goya's Bull Fight among the number.

Some pictures given in these early days were works in general favor at the moment, the popularity of which has not survived. Many of these are no longer on exhibition. They have performed their task in our genesis, however, giving pleasure to many for a number of years. Certain others, on the contrary, now numbered among the most precious, were not considered so highly at the time they were given. In this category are the two Hunting Scenes by Piero di Cosimo from Robert Gordon in 1875 and the Boy with a Sword and the Girl with a Parrot, both by Manet, which Erwin Davis (also the donor of the Jeanne d'Arc by Bastien-Lepage) had the boldness and foresight to give as early as 1889.

The year 1893 marks the first participation of George A. Hearn in the growth of the collection. Thirteen years later he carried out the plan of a fund for the purchase of contemporary American paintings, increased since by the Arthur Hoppock Hearn Fund given by Mr. Hearn in memory of his son for the same purpose. With the advice and help of the donor, until his death in 1913, the income from these funds has already yielded seventy-three works, to which many more have been added by gift from Mr. Hearn. The collection of American art of today from this and other sources is the most complete branch of the collection and gives a wide representation of what is being done in our own country.

In 1913 the important bequest from Benjamin Altman was received. The collection, remarkable for the wide range of interest it embraces and the prominence of its contents, includes fifty-one pictures. Among these are Dutch paintings of the seventeenth century, including thirteen by Rembrandt, as well as examples by Vermeer, Hals, and others; a very remarkable group of primitives, Memling, Botticelli, Mantegna, Antonello da Messina, Holbein being among the artists represented; and works by Velazquez, Giorgione, Titian, and Van Dyck. The collection according to the terms of the bequest must be exhibited as a whole; it has been permanently installed in the seven galleries (K 30-36) in the new south wing of the Museum.

In 1920 the Museum received as a bequest from William K. Vanderbilt a notable collection of sixteenth-, seventeenth-, and eighteenth-century paintings, which include important examples by Holbein, Boucher, Greuze, Gainsborough, Reynolds, Rembrandt, and other Dutch masters.

In 1921 the collection of Michael Dreicer was received by bequest; in it were twenty-four paintings, the northern schools being well represented. One of these is of prime importance, Christ Appearing to His Mother by Roger van der Weyden, a shutter from the triptych given by Queen Isabella the Catholic to the Cathedral of Granada.

In 1924 the Museum received an important bequest of Americana from Charles Allen Munn, including thirteen paintings as well as prints and decorative arts. These are all shown in the American Wing, one gallery in particular, Number 2, being devoted to the paintings and named after Mr. Munn.

In 1925 a large bequest of European paintings was received from Collis P. Huntington, which includes such important works as the Vermeer Lady with a Lute, Cuyp's Piping Shepherds, and the Calmady Children by Lawrence.

At all stages in the history of the collection valuable aid has been given by those who have generously lent their pictures. Mr. Morgan, besides his gifts of Columbus by Sebastiano del Piombo, The Assumption of the Virgin by Benvenuto di Giovanni, The Argonauts by Pesellino, and many more, helped continually by lending works from his collection. With but few exceptions the pictures that he acquired after 1906 were shown in the Museum and many of them have never left its walls since their purchase by him. In 1916, his son, J. Pierpont Morgan, presented to the Museum the Virgin and Child Enthroned with Saints by Raphael, the so-called Colonna Madonna, which had been on exhibition in the Museum since his father lent it in 1912. In the following year the Museum received as gifts from Mr. Morgan all the pictures lent from his father's collection which were at that time in the Museum. This munificent gift consisted of works of various schools and included such masterpieces as the Visit to the Nursery by Metsu and the Annunciation by Roger van der Weyden.

By the will of Hugo Reisinger the Museum received in 1914 a fund for the purchase of modern German art, out of which Böcklin's masterpiece, The Island of the Dead, was purchased in 1926. In 1915 Maria De Witt Jesup bequeathed seventy-one pictures from the collection of her husband, Morris K. Jesup, and a fund for the maintenance and increase of the collection.

The regular buying of paintings began in 1905, after the receipt of the Rogers Fund, the first of the great bequests and gifts of money by which the Museum has been enriched. The Nativity by El Greco was the first painting bought out of this fund, which for four or five years was the single great source available for purchases without restrictions as regards schools. With the Hewitt Fund, 1908, and the Kennedy Fund, 1910, the possibilities were largely increased, the latter in particular being utilized conspicuously for the benefit of the painting collection. Many of the important purchases of recent years—Wolf and Fox Hunt by Rubens, Mars and Venus by Veronese, Three Miracles of Saint Zenobius by Botticelli, Meditation on the Passion by Carpaccio, Four Saints by Correggio, and others—are due to the Kennedy Fund. The purchases out of the Leland gift, 1912, are the Mouth of the Scheldt by Van de Cappelle and the Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes by Tintoretto.

While these funds are most frequently drawn upon for the purchase of paintings, the following are all available: Marquand Fund, 1894; Dodge Fund, 1899; Curtis Fund, 1901; Amelia B. Lazarus Fund, 1906; Avery Memorial Fund, 1907; Smith Fund, 1911; and Egleston Fund, 1912. Of these the Smith Fund is absolutely unrestricted, the others must be used to purchase works of art, and the Curtis Fund, by the terms of the gift, must be used to purchase paintings by old masters and those of the early English school. The Marquand gift is employed to increase the Marquand collection of old masters.

from heaven. In the lower right panel, the Saint witnesses a bishop being tempted by the devil in the form of a beautiful woman; above, St. Andrew is being bound to the cross. In the uprights separating the principal panels are eight small, single, full-length figures of holy men. The predella is divided into seven panels but the right-hand one is missing. The subjects beginning at the left are St. Andrew and the woman who prayed to Diana on behalf of her sister; the woman brings St. Andrew to her sister; St. Andrew drives away the demons in the form of dogs; the dead Christ, upheld by angels, stands in the tomb; St. Andrew raises the dead youth who has been strangled; and St. Andrew brings to life the four drowned men.

B652-1 THREE MIRACLES OF SAINT ZENOBIUS. (334-424; Zenobius was a wealthy Florentine who devoted his life to the Church and became bishop of Florence.) An open square in the city; at the left the Saint is stopped by a funeral procession and brings the body back to life. In the center the Saint, while on a journey, meets a party bringing relics of a martyr; the leader having fallen and been crushed to death is restored by the Saint. The story told at the right is in three scenes: St. Eugenius, while gravely ill, hears that a relative has died without receiving the last sacrament; St. Zenobius therefore takes blessed water and salt to the bedroom of St. Eugenius, who rises from his sick bed, crosses the square, and in the foreground is seen sprinkling the holy water over his relative, who revives. There are three other panels of this series; two are in the Mond Collection in London and one in the Dresden Gallery. These panels were probably intended to decorate a chest containing clerical vestments in some church dedicated to St. Zenobius. acq. by Abdy from Berlin hand, rests on her knees; in the right she holds a crayon.

 She is a blonde about twenty, wearing a short-sleeved, high-waisted white gown of the fashion of the Directoire (1795-1799) with a pink ribbon about her slim waist and a white kerchief about her neck. Her chair, upholstered in blue, is covered with a salmon-red shawl. The background is an austere gray wall with a window at the left. Through its panes, one of them cracked, one sees a high masonry embankment where a gentleman and lady lean on an iron railing; a plain high building beyond. The light on the sitter all comes from the window, making a

MADONNA AND CHILD WITH SAINT ANNE. St. Anne, with fixed look, her head and chin covered with a white drapery, holds the sleeping Christ Child on her lap and rests her left hand on the Virgin's shoulder; Mary, her head lower than St. Anne's, with half-closed eyes and joined hands, adores the Child. Several similar compositions by Dürer exist; Waagen mentions ten. An exact study for this St. Anne is in the Albertina at Vienna. In the middle of the nineteenth century this picture was the subject of discussions as to its authenticity; it is listed as by Dürer in the monograph on this artist by Moritz Thausing, who reports the arguments.

- F62S-8 LIFE OF SAINT GODELIÈVE. A polyptych. (According to the legend, Godeliève, a pious young maiden, became the wife of Bertolf, who lived at Ghisteles, Flanders, from 1067 to 1070; he soon tired of her and although she bore his maltreatment and that of her mother-in-law with Christian fortitude, he had her put to death. She was canonized in 1084. The name Godeliève in Flemish means Love of God.) When open, the five panels illustrate her life. At the left she is playing with two young girls and her parents are in the background; next she is giving alms; the central panel shows a feast being prepared by angels, the marriage ceremony, and her preparation for a religious life; in the right-hand panels she is being strangled by her husband's hirelings and thrown into a well. When closed, the doors show the donor and several saints. Painted toward end of fifteenth century.

PETER SONNAVATER'S AND MASTER KNUT'S OPPROBRIOUS ENTRY INTO STOCKHOLM IN 1526. (These two Swedish Bishops had sought refuge after their unsuccessful rebellion against Gustavus I, with the Archbishop Olaf in Trondheim; the latter betrayed them to the king's followers who, dressing them in rags and putting a crown of straw on Sonnavater's head and a mitre of birch-bark on Knut's, mounted them on starving horses and took them to Stockholm in a procession amidst jeers and insults. They were led to the market-place and, after drinking the executioner's health, were broken on the wheel.) The procession is passing through a street of Stockholm.

LINGELBACH, JOHANNES. Dutch; born 1622 at Frankfort-on-the-Main; died 1674 at Amsterdam, where he had settled about 1650. Genre and military subjects.

L642-1 BATTLE SCENE. In the foreground is a cavalry charge where men and horses are being overthrown; on a hill in the middle distance is a round fort, and beyond, an arched bridge leading toward the city at the left. At one time this picture was erroneously called Sobieski defeating the Turks before Vienna, but this battle did not take place until 1683.

Ex coll.: Comte Cornet, Brussels; Prince Kaunutz.

H. $44\frac{3}{8}$ in. W. $63\frac{3}{16}$ in. Canvas. Signed: I. LINGELBACH fe 167-(?).

Purchase, 1871.

L642-2 DANCE OF PEASANTS. In the foreground peasants are dancing to the music of a bagpipe; at the left is an old house; the trunk of a large tree occupies the center of the canvas; mountains are in the distance at the right.

Ex coll.: Comte Cornet, Brussels; Lord Palmerston, Broadlands.

DESCENT FROM THE CROSS. The body of Christ is being taken down from the cross by three men who stand on ladders that lean against the cross; Mary Magdalen clings to the base of the cross; at the left the Virgin is supported by three women; in the immediate foreground the nails lie on a white cloth. The general composition is that of the altarpiece begun by Filippino and finished by Perugino which is now in the Florence Academy.

LIPPI, FRA FILIPPO. Italian; born 1406(?) at Florence; died 1469. Pupil, perhaps, of Lorenzo Monaco, influenced by Masaccio and Fra Angelico. In his eighth year he was placed in the convent of the Carmelites, in whose church, soon after 1423, Masaccio was painting his renowned frescoes. When about twenty-five he left the convent so as to be free to practise his art. In 1454-65 he painted his great series of frescoes in the Cathedral of Prato.

M_{34S}-1 THE MARTYRDOM OF TWO SAINTS. Two panels in one frame representing the martyrdom of Saint Adrian and probably Saint Quentin. Saint Adrian is nude, bound to an anvil; one of the executioners beats his stomach with a hammer, another chops off his feet, while the Emperor Maximilian and three of his court on horseback look on. In the background are an island, a castle with towers, and a drawbridge. In the second panel a young man at the left, wearing a brocaded brown robe, preaches from a book that a small angel holds up to him supporting it on his forehead in the manner of a sub-deacon. Very probably it is Saint Quentin, whom an angel delivered from prison and who forthwith continued his preaching. Other figures in the picture seem unconnected with the saint; two culprits in white shirts, their hands bound, are being led to execution by soldiers, a frenzied old woman half kneels in front of them, and a young person, her baby in her arms, seems to comfort and encourage the foremost prisoner; a soldier mounts a ladder to the wattled roof of a shed where a drawn sword is lying. Three dignitaries on horseback direct the proceedings. The crenelated walls of the castle courtyard strengthened by two towers enclose the scene.

in the distance Orpheus and several horsemen are at the base of a jagged rock; to the right on the top of a flat rock, Orpheus, Jason, and another consult the centaur Chiron; the abduction of Hylas is shown at the extreme right and in the distance is the Argo with the heroes on board. The second panel illustrates the doings of the Argonauts after their arrival in Colchis. Jason addresses King Æetes, who is seated on a dais supported on the backs of two white horses driven by a naked child; two women stand on the dais with the king, one of them being his daughter Medea; at the extreme right Jason kneels before the king in an upper porch of the palace while Medea looks on from a window; at the bottom of the steps Jason is shown with one foot in the stirrup and farther to the left he gallops across the draw-bridge. In a circular enclosure in the center of the picture, the fleece hangs on a tree; at the right Jason is killing the dragon while Orpheus plays a viola; the fire-breathing oxen are yoked to a plough and the warriors, who have grown from the dragon's teeth, are killing one another; outside the enclosure is the white figure of Diana with her hounds and a scene of witchcraft.

Sa51-2 KING SOLOMON AND THE QUEEN OF SHEBA. Panel divided into two parts by a border. At the left, in the city of Sheba, men are carrying boxes and bales and loading them upon camels while the Queen and her ladies oversee the packing; in the center of this part the retinue passes out of the city gates with, in the foreground, two white horses drawing a chariot in which the Queen is seated upon a dais while before her are two trumpeters and four musicians; in another chariot and on foot are soldiers and attendants preceded by the camels guided by apes and negro boys perched on the bales. In the right-hand part the procession is entering the gates of Jerusalem. At the extreme right King Solomon stands in the loggia of his house and receives his guest; crowds look on from the square and balcony; landscape background. All wear costumes of the artist's time.

The border is in relief, gilded. At each side are armorial bearings; the shield at the left is blue with a bend, gold, between three gold vines, probably the device of the Luci family of Florence; that at the right is red with a counter-embattled fesse, likewise of gold, between three pairs of gold wheat ears, and belongs to the Sienese family of the Spannochì. At the base is the following inscription: QUESTA SIE LASTORIA QUANDO LAREINA SABA ANDO AUDIRE LA SAPIENTIA DELRE SALAMONE INGIERUSALEM. (This is the history [of the time] when the Queen of Sheba went to hear the wisdom of King Solomon in Jerusalem.) The panel was a decoration for furniture, probably a settle or marriage chest.

THE GLORIFICATION OF FRANCESCO BARBARO. (Francesco Barbaro [1398-1454], famous particularly for the defense of Brescia, besieged by the Milanese army under Piccinino.) The hero, dressed in classic costume—yellow cuirass with white skirt, and a crimson and gold brocaded mantle—is seated on a ruined cornice amidst the clouds. He holds a general's baton and one arm rests on a lion beside him. Round about are female figures representing the Virtues—a winged Fame blowing a trumpet, a winged Victory in white holding a laurel crown, Plenty in pale blue, with a cornucopia, and others of uncertain significance. On the clouds at the lower part are seated Prudence in a dark blue dress, a mask at the back of her head and a serpent coiled about her arm, and Art in a robe of plum color holding a statuette. Cupids flit among the balmy sunset clouds. It was painted as a decoration for the Palazzo Barbaro, Venice, and remained there until about 1870.

mantle and has a white wimple about her head and neck. Through a window in the porch behind them one sees the Resurrection taking place in the landscape beyond. Near the keystone of the arch is a tiny angel holding a crown and a scroll with an inscription (Mvlier h[a]ec p[er]ceveravit . . . ideo data e[st] ei corona . . . This woman was preserved [from every stain], therefore is given her a crown.) Sculptured figures of St. Mark and St. Paul are on the recess of the doorway and above them are groups in high relief illustrating the last events of the Virgin's life; the capitals of the outer arch are sculptured with the story of David and Goliath, right, and the carrying off of the gates of Gaza, left.

This is the right-hand shutter of a triptych, the other parts of which are in the Cathedral of Granada, to which they were bequeathed by Queen Isabella the Catholic; the work was given to her father by Pope Martin V.
